Toledoans to lose jobs:

Layoffs are in store for Toledo workers as the city continues its struggle to erase a multi-million dollar budget deficit, local officials said.

City Manager Thomas Hoover said the city is facing a $17.5 million deficit in its 1991 budget. Toledo is projecting $147 million in expenditures and about $130 million in revenue.

Hoover said the faltering local economy has forced the city to propose an elimination of funds for 150 positions. Many of the positions were already not being filled because of a hiring freeze last year. But at least 33 people would lose their jobs under Hoover's current proposal, including 10 people in the Municipal Court's office.

The proposals would save the city $5.7 million, Hoover said.

Over the last decade, Toledo has lost thousands of manufacturing jobs. The last three years have been especially hard, with nearly 4,000 jobs either eliminated or moved to other U.S. cities with lower labor and utility costs.

Iraq accepts Soviet proposal

'The war itself continues'

by Thomas Ginsberg
Associated Press writer

MOSCOW — Iraq accepted a Soviet peace plan that calls for an Iraqi withdrawal from Kuwait and an end to the Persian Gulf War, a Kremlin spokesperson said late Thursday night.

The United States said it was studying the proposal but President Bush had "some concerns" about it, a White House spokesperson said.

The agreement contained no mention of the Palestinian problem or the Arab-Israeli conflict.

The Soviet spokesperson, Vitaly Ignatenko, announced the agreement following more than two hours of talks between President Mikhail Gorbachev and Iraq's foreign minister, Tariq Aziz, on the terms of a Soviet peace plan proposed earlier this week.

"The response is positive," Ignatenko told reporters immediately after the meeting. "The two parties came to the conclusion that it is possible to find a way out of the military conflict in the gulf."

In Washington, presidential spokesperson Marlin Fitzwater said Bush had no immediate response, and would be studying the plan. However, Fitzwater said the United States had concerns about aspects of the agreement.

"The war itself continues," Fitzwater added. "There's no change at this point in our prosecution of the war."

Ignatenko said the two sides agreed on eight points, starting with Iraqi agreement to a full and unconditional withdrawal from Kuwait.

The pullout would begin two days after a cease-fire, and would be monitored under U.N. auspices by countries not directly in-involved in the month-old Gulf War, Ignatenko said.

Iraq also agreed to release all prisoners of war immediately after the cease-fire, the spokesperson added. He said details of the plan would be worked out and presented to the U.N. Security Council later today.

Gorbachev spoke to Bush by telephone shortly after the meeting with Aziz. Bush had previously said the Soviet plan was not acceptable, although he said he was encouraged by the possibility of talks about withdrawal.

Fitzwater said Gorbachev and Bush spoke for just about 30 minutes. He said Bush thanked Gorbachev "but raised serious concerns about several points in the plan."

He didn't elaborate about which points the leaders discussed.

"President Bush said the United States would consult with its coalition partners on the proposal," Fitzwater said.

The plan outlined by Ignatenko did not include any mention of linkage to an Israeli withdrawal from occupied Arab territories, one of the sticking points in all previous peace discussions.

However, a knowledgeable U.S. official, speaking on condition of anonymity, said he foresaw problems because the plan does not account for reparations by Iraq to Kuwait.

"That, essentially, would be letting them get away with it," the official said.

One of the U.N. resolutions passed after the invasion of Kuwait "reminds" Iraq that it is liable for damages from its invasion. It says arrangements "may be established" to require restitution.

The announcement in Moscow came after Baghdad radio had gone off the air overnight, so there was no immediate response from Iraq. The Iraqi news agency had also stopped transmissions for the night.

Ignatenko said details of the peace agreement remained to be worked out.

Senate Republican Leader Bob Dole, in a speech on the Senate floor, said, "Let's be cautious." He said that Saddam "might be playing a stalling game."

While the world studied the announcement from Moscow, Bush went to Ford's Theater to see "Black Eagles," a show about black Air Force pilots in World War II.

Campus groups express mixed war sentiment

by Jacqueline Porter

The University Union was a scene of varying emotions Thursday as two student groups expressed their opinions of Operation Desert Storm in different ways.

Outside the front doors of the Union, the Peace Coalition joined in a nationwide protest of the Gulf War.

"This was a day set aside by [peace] groups across the nation because February 21 — also happens to be the 26th anniversary of the assassination of Malcolm X," said John Bernard, senior liberal studies major.

Just inside the Union Foyer, Phi Sigma Kappa fraternity decided to show their support of the soldiers by passing out yellow ribbons to passers-by.

"We [the fraternity] wanted to increase awareness and show our support of our fraternity brothers and other students over there," said Jeremy Dott, community service chairperson.

Each organization had different reasons for their methods of protest.

In a brainstorming session, the coalition decided to read passages from various authors who wrote about their opinions of war, Bernard said.

"We've been reading from a number of books by [Bob] Dylan, [Henry David] Thoreau, Martin Luther King and others who had something to say about the real effects of war and what really happens to the people involved," he said.

The fraternity came up with the idea of passing out ribbons through suggestions during a meeting, Dott said.

"It is really personal to us — our president's brother is there right now along with some of our fraternity brothers," he said. "We want to stress support for our troops and we want them to come home safely."

Both groups have varying opinions about student reactions to their causes.

Peace Coalition member Christian Fleming said he does not think people are paying attention to the coalition's readings.

"I think a lot of people are walking by and just passing this off as nothing," he said.

"[Students] are just concerned with their own lives and they're not concerned with what's going on on the other side of the world to people our own age."

Junior Phi Sigma Kappa member Darren Guido said people have had a positive reaction to their cause.

"We have had several hundred people come through here and people have been real understanding about our cause," he said.

"We have gone through four rolls of ribbon today — that's almost 80 yards," Dott added.

The Peace Coalition and the Phi Sigs said they hope they have made an impact on students in some way.

Graduate Student Senate President Wayne Berman said he hopes people will realize the seriousness of the war through the coalition's readings.

Malcolm X remembered Incumbent declines party endorsement

by Marvin C. Brown
staff writer

Students gathered in the Amani Room Thursday night, on the anniversary of Malcolm X's 1965 assassination, to celebrate the civil rights leader's life and contributions.

The Malcolm X Memorial, sponsored by the Black Student Union, was a part of the continuing Black Pride and Consciousness Sessions aimed at uniting African-American students.

Various black student leaders spoke on the long-lasting effects of Malcolm X's struggles.

Maurice Tate, BSU president, said Malcolm X's attempts to unify all African Americans is an example for black students to follow.

"We need to start networking — the [campus] NAACP, Black Greek Council, the Board of Black Cultural Activities," he said. "We need to be together — there are no individual problems concerning black students on this campus ... there are only 400 of us."

Kappa Alpha Psi President Troy Hardgrow, said he believes in Malcolm X's ideas of using "any means necessary."

"In the 1960's passiveness might have worked, but now we can't be passive," he said. "It's time to fight for what we believe in — this is the concept that Malcolm X presented to me."

Two videos detailing Malcolm X's struggles followed the lectures.

Born Malcolm Little in Omaha, Neb., May 19, 1925, Malcolm X rose from an impoverished and criminal lifestyle to become the national spokesperson for the Nation of Islam by 1963.

With his controversial credo, "By any means necessary," Malcolm X saw violence in self-defense as justifiable — a view which contrasted Martin Luther King's non-violent preachings.

Malcolm X's outspokenness as President John F. Kennedy's assassination — he called Kennedy's death a product of a violent America which the government chose to ignore — caused his suspension from the Nation of Islam, and his subsequent founding of his own organization: The Organization of Afro-American Unity.

Malcolm X's refusal to be silenced made him the target of countless death threats, the firebombing of his home and his eventual assassination in New York City Feb. 21, 1965. His funeral was attended by more than 20,000.

Nationally, USA Today (Feb. 21) reported more than 200 college campuses and high schools used the anniversary, in conjunction with Black History Month, as a day to participate in marches and teach-ins to protest the Persian Gulf War.

"He is still with us today," said BBKA member Muhammed Luster. "We have a responsibility to take on his legacy and continue in the struggle."

Recycling Center Expands

Craig Yarger works at the Jaycees' recycling center where the dropoff area is being improved. According to Kent Gardam, the city engineer in charge of the 7,200 square foot addition, the added space will allow an expansion of recycling services. The addition was contracted by Dunipace Builders, a local firm, and the total cost will be $74,000. The projected completion date is March 1.

Alex Teodosio, senior political science major, may have received a break last week when the Bowling Green Democratic Executive committee decided not to endorse a candidate for the city council at-large position.

Teodosio said he was all set to go before the committee to be screened at a meeting Thursday, Feb. 14 when incumbent Tom Anderson, a University geography professor, said he would rather the committee not endorse a candidate.

"My feeling was that it is the democratic process to wait for the primary," Anderson said. The primary will take place May 7.

Teodosio said this is a big break because it gives him a better chance to earn a vote from the straight ticket voter.

"Tom was a real gentleman," said Teodosio. "He said he would rather not have either candidate endorsed because 'it would be more fair to the people.'"

Anderson said he did not do what he did because Teodosio is a student.

"It doesn't make a difference whether he is a student or not. I did what I think is fair," Anderson said.

Anderson said he hopes his past record is good enough to win another term.

"I'd like to continue the recent economic development that's occurred in Wood County," Anderson said.

Advisory board faces dilemmas

If a student leader you know looks stressed out this weekend, try to be understanding.

The great ACGFA giveaway, an annual "classic" of University politics, has returned to the University.

This is the second of three weekends in which the Advisory Committee on General Fee Allocations will listen to presentations from campus organizations.

For the leaders of student organizations expecting money, it is a time to put on a winning smile, highlight their achievements and re-evaluate future goals.

And for ACGFA, a 15-student board appointed by students, the choices will be agonizing. They have about $420,000 to give — and they are being asked for $518,000.

Some student organizations would not exist without funding from general fees. Did you know University intramurals received $62,000 last year, and is asking for $9,080 more this time around?

Undergraduate Student Government, the recipient of $27,950 last year, is asking for $6,050 more. Graduate Student Senate is asking for $28,964 this year, a potential $1,464 increase. The Dry Dock is asking for a $2,005 increase, to $14,205.

Other organizations will be kneeling before ACGFA for the first time.

WFAL-AM 680, Black Greek Council, Asian Communities United, the Association of College Entrepreneurs, Chinese Club, and the Society of Physics Students are some of these newcomers.

ACGFA is one of the few, real examples of students becoming involved in the decision-making process at the University.

The USG president annually selects five ACGFA representatives, while the GSS leadership chooses two. Other organizations also are represented, some on a rotating basis.

The African-American Graduate Student Association, the African Peoples Association, the Black Student Union, the Commuter Off-Campus Organization, Women for Women, the Resident Student Association, the Latino Student Association, and Interfraternity Council are represented this year.

Evelyn Watkins, Mike Callow, Oghenegare Otojare, Sherlette Dixon, Maurice Tate, Craig Mey, Cristina Gonzales, Marcia Tyson, David Darcy, Kevin McCallum, Sharon Novak, Laurie Staas, James Walters, Wayne Berman, and Tina Hastings are your student representatives this year.

If a student organization is important to you, help them make an informed choice by telling them why.

Ideas change as knowledge is gained

Phaedrus studied hard during this period and learned extremely fast and kept his mouth shut, but it would be wrong to give the least impression that he was any sort of good student.

A good student seeks knowledge fairly and impartially. Phaedrus did not.

He had an axe to grind, and all he sought were those things that helped him grind it and the means of knocking down anything which prevented him from grinding it.

He had no time for or interest in other people's Great Books. He was there solely to write a Great Book of his own. (Robert Pirsig from Zen and the Art of Motorcycle Maintenance.)

The dull roar is back — the dull roar that the ancient Greek philosopher Phaedrus must have felt when, in the process of searching for rationality, he went insane.

The dull roar that only a graduating senior could appreciate. The frustration of being educated but ignorant.

Ahh, to be a freshman and superficial again, when the popular reading list included The Art of the Deal by Donald Trump and weekly issues of Sports Illustrated and National Review. When "the Gipper" said it was time for the U.S.A. to kick some ass again on the playing field of the world and I drank to that at the age of 18. Those were indeed good and simple times.

Now all I feel is disillusionment as Phaedrus did in ancient Greece. The disillusionment that comes with the accumulation of knowledge. Knowledge which destroys your previously-held beliefs and attacks the Great Book which you set out to write the first year of college, which included chapters about wealth and politics in a white man's world. Then you find that by the time graduation nears, not only have you not

God and Man at Bowling Green

by Scott Geringer

completed the book, you've ended up throwing the damn thing on the bonfire of idealism.

The more we learn, the less we actually know.

Seniors stand on the precipice of graduating from the University with a degree in quotology, and we do not have one concrete answer to the social ills of modern America — racism, sexism, ignorance, poverty, etc.. We buy into beautiful ideologies which seem to be the cure-all on paper, but in practice, they become full of holes. All the ideologies ever practiced have not cured the pain of a minority or stopped the atrocities of war.

These problems became clearer to me in the past few months. Last semester, Dr. William Rock ended his History Senior Pro-Seminar class with the question, "Has America progressed?"

Fellow history major and student activist Kevin Turner was quick to respond. He did not think the United States had progressed much — if any. Kevin pointed out many injustices the federal government had exercised against U.S. citizens — specifically minority U.S. citizens.

I vehemently disputed Kevin in my mind, but for me to speak at that time would have added to the considerable tension already subsisting in the room. Anyways, like Phaedrus, I was about to complete my Great Book and had little reason to entertain any of Kevin's remarks.

Over Christmas break, I pushed the question out of my mind. My Great Book was almost complete and any additional deliberation would only add to an already strenuous and time-consuming labor.

However, as fate would have it, the question, "Has America progressed?" resurfaced last week in Domna Pastourmatzi's Utopian Lit class.

In discussion of Edward Bellamy's Looking Backward, the class discovered that the utopian ideas of Bellamy were quite a desirable alternative in comparison to the capitalistic chaos currently existing in the decaying urban centers of this country. A sudden rage stirred from my very soul. My Great Book was being challenged. This time, I could not sit idly by, so I pounced on the question, reciting portions of my Great Book — arguing that this nation had always reformed upon crisis and indeed progress had been made through these reforms.

One student spoke in opposition to the ideas in my Great Book and I struck her down as if Satan were challenging the Ten Commandments.

I had vanquished my attacker in principle and fact, but for some reason my Great Book did not sound as great when I had to stand up and be recognized as the source, author and defender. I knew it wouldn't.

Today I begin writing my new Great Book, using many of my original ideas but in a different context — trying to gain useful knowledge impartially. I tell my own failure in the hopes that others have experienced the same trials and have survived to write a new book. If not, I guess I am doomed to the fate of Phaedrus — while in the search of rationality...

Hints outlined on getting to know the USG candidates

Editor The News:

It is time again for USG elections. In order for students to become more familiar with the candidates, here are a few suggestions (to the students). First of all, please attend a USG General Assembly meeting. They are on alternating Monday evenings at 7:30 in the Assembly Room, McFall Center. A large portion of the candidates for both At-Large Senators and President/Vice President are presently members of USG. Here you can see choices in action. This will give you a good idea of how they will act or perform next year.

Another suggestion is for you to attend any rallies or meetings the candidates are holding. This will give you a chance to hear their positions on various campus issues. You can compare the candidates and then make an informed decision about whom you are going to vote for on March 12th and 13th.

Flag symbolizes the sacrifices of our troops

Editor The News:

I would like to express a simple "thank-you" to The News staff for printing the American flag on the back page of the Feb. 19 issue. The flag is the symbol of our support for the troops and it is crucial that our actions are in support of the sacrifices they are making; sacrifices that we can never fully appreciate while sitting here content and safe in the U.S. Regardless of everyone's differing viewpoints of our involvement in the Middle East, it is good that we come to realize that our troops are human beings. They have fears and feelings of anxiety just like everyone else. You are to be commended for taking the initiative and for a job well done.

Ignorance a big reason for fear of homosexuals

Editor The News:

In response to Chris Dare's letter on Feb. 14:

You make me sick and utterly disgusted. The only thing I found correctly stated was when you said "being homophobic is not 'discrimination'." Being homophobic is about being ignorant about homosexuals and homosexuality. But, if a job applicant was turned down because of his or her sexual preference, that, Mr. Dare, would be considered discrimination.

You compare homosexuals to the Nazis and the Satanists. What you are saying is that homosexuals are committing some form of anti-Christian act by simply being themselves? You say, "being gay is not like being black or hispanic." There you are definitely wrong. The reason why society can pick a black or a hispanic out of a crowd is by the color of his or her skin, which you cannot do with homosexuals because they do not have external markings to show they are gay. But they're discriminated against all the same.

You say homosexuality is "a lifestyle and a preference, an indication that a person's mind does not operate along the same channels as a normal member of our society." May I ask you this: Where do you get off saying gays are not "normal"? Just because you may judge one person as being "normal" that does not make that person "normal" nor does it make anyone else "abnormal."

I am not homophobic because I know who and what I am. I do not question others' sexual preferences because I do not have to question mine. Maybe you question others' because you have to question yours.

Homophobic views defended

Editor The News:

This letter is in response to those who have portrayed me as some type of mindless robot, programmed by an evil society to hate everybody. I don't like gays. When men are able to reproduce — I'll support them. I know lots of people who don't like them either. None of them are sinister fiends who beat up old ladies.

In my previous letter, I was not referring to criminals and murderers. I was merely stating that there are certain individuals who may be law abiding citizens, but nonetheless have lifestyles the majority of us find offensive. I can't deny them the right to make their own choices, but you can't deny me my right to resent them for it. And what's all this talk about hate? I am not a hateful person. However, I do think it's good to hate certain things. I hate guys who sell drugs to little kids (or anybody else). I hate corporations that dump chemicals into our rivers. And if I have kids, I am gonna teach them to hate those things too, because I sure wouldn't want them to grow up liking them.

I saw Geraldo a couple weeks back where they had gay and lesbian marriages. I think that's sick. And what's with this homosexual who wants the senate seat? Give it a rest, man. He didn't get what he wanted, so he's using discrimination charges as blackmail against Kevin Coughlin. I heard that he already ran once and lost. Can't he take a hint? We don't want gays in student government because they are loathsome [sic] and repulsive. You can make fun of me all you want, but at least I know I am right. I hereby declare next Monday "Say no to Gays Day."

Please show your support by wearing shoes to class.

Even with loss, coach Larranaga motivates players

Editor The News:

I'm writing in response to a letter written by Kevin Fulk in the Feb. 20 issue of The News concerning Jim Larranaga. Fulk knows about as much about basketball as my sister, and believe me that's no compliment.

Fulk tried to point out how badly Larranaga motivates his players. I don't know where you've been the last two years, but Larranaga did a very good job of motivation when the Falcons beat highly ranked Michigan State. We're talking about the same Michigan State team that gave No. 2 Ohio State their only loss of the season.

I wanted to write this earlier because I just knew someone was going to try and stick this loss (EMU) on him. If a 19 to 21-year-old man cannot get motivated by himself for possibly the biggest game in the MAC all season then don't blame the coaches.

Secondly, get off the back of sports' editor Matt Schroder, he's only trying to show his support for a fine basketball team. Fulk also thought Schroder didn't know what it takes to win on the basketball court, but I think Dick Vitale, the "basketball guru" does. The Tuesday after BG's defeat of Michigan State, he called Larranaga "a great motivator."

I do agree with Fulk on one point. It is unfortunate our basketball team isn't as successful as we would like it to be, but the sun will come up in the morning just the same.

Sale of infrared devices probed

WASHINGTON (AP) — Iraq obtained night vision equipment, built with American parts, from a Dutch firm that apparently sold it illegally, government and corporate officials said.

The Pentagon is investigating how Iraq got the equipment, key elements of which were supplied by Hughes Aircraft Co. in Los Angeles.

Richard Dore, a Hughes spokesperson, said the company was "kind of hoodwinked" because it believed the infrared imaging sensors it agreed to sell Delft Instruments in Delft, Holland, were destined for the Dutch military.

But a U.S. official familiar with the case said a "considerable amount of night vision equipment" was shipped to Iraq through a Delft subsidiary in Belgium, as well as through other sources.

"We also know some of that equipment had a U.S. origin," said the official, who spoke on condition of anonymity.

The imaging sensors, which detect the infrared rays given off by warm objects such as machines or troops, can be mounted on tanks or missiles or can stand alone. Dore said Hughes sold the sensors to Delft, which made a range of end products.

The United States has suspended all weapons contracts between American suppliers and Delft Instruments pending the outcome of the investigation, according to officials at the State and Defense departments.

"We have informed the Dutch government that all munitions licenses to Delft have been suspended," the official said.

Dore said deliveries of sensors for infrared imaging systems to Delft were halted in January, two months after Hughes learned of an investigation by the Pentagon's Defense Technology Security Agency. Hughes is cooperating with the probe and is not accused of any violations.

U.S. military officials have said the allies have an big advantage over Iraqi troops in the Persian Gulf War because of its sophisticated night-vision equipment.

The Iraqis' night-vision capability "is very marginal," Maj. Gen. Barry R. McCaffrey, commander of the 24th Mechanized Infantry Division, said in September.

Therefore, Iraq's night battles at the Saudi Arabian town of Khafji, the first major ground encounter of the war, surprised the allies.

"Delft equipment was picked up at Khafji," the U.S. official said.

Neither Dore nor Rinze Kingma, president of Delft Instruments, would provide details of the contract between Hughes and Delft. They did not say how much it was worth or how many sensors were involved.

The State Department's Office of Defense Trade Controls, which issues munitions licenses, said such details were proprietary information.

Kingma said in a telephone interview he had "heard rumors" about the suspension but has "not been officially informed of this."

He denied the company had done anything wrong.

War reporting rules analyzed

WASHINGTON — Walter Cronkite said the Pentagon's system for dealing with journalists in the Persian Gulf War is doing the public such a disservice that he'd prefer reporters be censored but free to range over the battle front.

But Pete Williams, the Defense Department's chief spokesperson, said the former CBS anchorperson's idea wouldn't work. He said war moves too fast these days to permit correspondents to hotdog it on their own, showing up on a unit's perimeter unexpectedly in a four-wheel-drive vehicle and expecting to be welcomed. They'd probably be shot by sentries, he said.

"We can't say, 'Y'all come to the battlefield,'" Williams said. Williams and Cronkite presented their ideas for war coverage Wednesday at a hearing by the Senate Governmental Operations Committee on the Pentagon's press restrictions.

Three correspondents, recently back from the war zone, testified the Pentagon system of limiting coverage to a handful of news pools, who must then share their reporting with their colleagues, has broken down.

Like Cronkite, they advocated open coverage, although they did not share his view on the necessity of censorship.

Malcolm Browne of The New York Times, Craig Hines of the Houston Chronicle and Frank Aukof of the Milwaukee Journal said the pool system was envisioned only as a stopgap means to put reporters on hand for the opening hours of an engagement.

After that, they said, it was assumed reporters would be free to cover the war on their own and competitively. That's the way the Vietnam War was covered, with correspondents usually hopping a helicopter ride and spending a week or so with its troops to capture the sense of what they go through.

In the Gulf, the Pentagon procedures make that kind of coverage almost non-existent. Only a relative handful get to be with the half-million U.S. troops.

"Exclusive coverage by pools allows military commanders to veto coverage of their units or to arrange it to their self-promoting advantage," Hines said.

Cronkite said reporters should be put in uniform, given military drivers and permitted to go to wherever the action is, with their dispatches or television tape subject to review by civilian lawyer censors, charged with eliminating only military secrets.

That was the method in use when he covered World War II as a young United Press correspondent, he said, and it worked.

Cronkite said "the number of correspondents wandering freely behind the lines must be controlled," but that could be done by accrediting reporters for major news organizations and letting them rotate.

Of critical importance to a democracy, he said, even if it means keeping the news from getting out for a day or two, is making sure a reporter is on hand to give the public — and history — a firsthand account of warfare.

"What we have now is pre-censorship, by telling you what you can't see," Cronkite said. "I'd rather have post-censorship where you could argue it out after you get your story."

Law to protect troops' families

WASHINGTON (AP) — The Senate Thursday night passed legislation protecting members of the National Guard and other armed forces reserve units serving in the Persian Gulf from mortgage foreclosure and a host of other legal problems.

The chamber passed the measure, an amendment to the Soldiers and Sailors Relief Act of 1940, on a voice vote without dissent and sent it to the House.

"Passage today is the only way to assure these citizen soldiers and sailors that their country will not fail to match their commitment to duty," said Sen. Dennis DeConcini, D-Ariz., chairperson of the Senate Veterans Affairs Committee.

"Let the word go out that America has nothing but uncompromising support for each and every reservist, wherever they serve, whenever they serve and however they serve," he said.

Earlier Thursday, Rep. Toby Roth, R-Wis., introduced legislation that would direct the Defense Department to allow immediate members of a family to be exempted from service within the same combat zone.

"Losing one member of a family is a real tragedy. Losing more than one, especially when we could have acted in time to prevent it, is too great a sacrifice for any family," Roth told reporters at a news conference.

Similar legislation sponsored by Sen. John Heinz, R-Pa., was defeated Wednesday. The Pentagon opposes it.

Among the protections afforded the more than 200,000 citizen-soldiers are these:

• An increase in the maximum rental or mortgage delinquency required before an eviction from $150 to $1,200.

• Reinstatement of employer-provided health insurance.

• A prohibition against credit discrimination related to a service member's credit record.

• Suspension of malpractice insurance premium payments for physicians called to active duty until their return to the United States.

• The right to return to the civilian job if called up for more than 90 days.

The Pentagon has a regulation to protect sole-surviving family members. Another directive states that all but one immediate family member can request a transfer from the same unit or ship in time of war.

Roth's proposal would allow members of the same family to request transfers out of a combat zone, as opposed to simply off the same ship or out of the same unit. It would require the department to honor the request of at least one of those family members.

Abortion topic explored

Group redefines pro-choice

by Jeni Bond
writer

In an effort to promote a new outlook on the issues of choice, Students for Choice will offer informational sessions throughout the semester.

The sessions, entitled "Reproductive Freedom Discussion Series" will be offered once a week and feature videos and guest speakers who will initiate discussion. Each session begins at 7:30 p.m. in the United Christian Center's Fellowship Hall, Wednesdays through March 20.

"We welcome everyone's opinion, but the purpose isn't to debate but to discuss," Catherine Keske, president of Students for Choice said.

In addition, Keske said, the reason for the series is to make people aware of the difference between pro-choice and pro-abortion.

"Being pro-choice is not being pro-abortion. We believe abortion is a personal decision based on personal morals and religious beliefs," she said.

Proposed legislation in Georgia and Utah to toughen abortion laws has driven Students for Choice to work even harder for reproductive freedom, she said.

"As long as there is a threat to reproductive rights there is a need for this kind of organization so we can continue fighting off these threats to our rights," Greg Richey, vice president of Students for Choice said.

Last semester Students for Choice registered more than 150 pro-choice voters before November's election and held a rally which attracted more than 100 people.

Although, the group is non-partisan it supports pro-choice candidates.

"Last semester the focus was more political while this semester we're focusing on education," Keske said.

One main focus of Students for Choice is "keeping abortion legal doesn't make the rate of premarital sex go up," according to Keske.

"You can be religiously, morally and ethically against abortion and still be pro-choice," she said.

Students for Life stress education

by Jeni Bond
writer

Students for Life are activity-oriented this semester in their efforts to educate the campus about abortion.

Guest speakers will discuss different aspects of the pro-life movement including post-abortion syndrome and feminists who are pro-life.

The psychological effects women experience after an abortion is the first lecture topic. Karen Keitzman, director of the Crisis Pregnancy Center of Adrian, Mich., will begin 8 p.m. Wednesday in the Union's Faculty Lounge. Students for Life believe the speakers may be helpful in eradicating misconceptions people may have about the pro-life movement.

"One falsehood is that women oppose abortion more than men," said Dennis Lann, co-vice president of Students for Life.

Although Students for Life is against abortion, they offer help to women who are considering it as an alternative.

"We refer women who are considering abortion to the Bowling Green Pregnancy Center. They can offer anything she needs including post and pre-natal care," Ken Gillaspay, co-vice president said.

Students for Life want to show people the abortion issue is important.

"We believe that life begins at conception and there is overwhelming evidence to support it," President Lisa Brennan said.

Other life issues are also on the agenda of the organization. They participate in activities with HOSPUS, a group which helps dying people deal with their fears of death.

However, the main focus of the group is abortion.

"We realize that women have died from illegal abortions, but more women have died since it became legal, not to mention 25 million babies which have also died," said Lann.

Fundraiser contributes to program for disabled

People will be able to take care of their body and raise money for the Wood County Special Olympics at a Jazz-A-Thon 11:30 a.m. - 4 p.m. Sunday in Anderson Arena.

"Our goal is two-fold," said Bill Ferguson, Wood County Special Olympics coordinator. "The most important goal is to raise money for the Special Olympics, [and secondly] a good turnout and for folks to have fun."

Liz Sheets, Wood County Special Olympics communications coordinator, said more than 500 people, including 30 instructors, from jazzercise classes in seven surrounding counties will participate.

"There are a number of [Jazzercise] instructors aware of Special Olympics," Sheets said. "It is a good cause [which gives] more opportunity for people with mental retardation to participate in the Special Olympics."

"We will be allowing walk-ons, starting at 11:30," she added. "We encourage students to stop by and participate."

Participants are encouraged to get pledges and donations from friends, neighbors, and local businesses, Sheets said.

Fifty door prizes will be given to the people with the most pledges, with first prize being a trip for two to a North Carolina condominium.

Ferguson said aerobic classes from the University also are collecting sponsors for Sunday's Jazz-A-Thon.

Churchills Supermarket, Subway and T.C.B.Y. will provide refreshments, while 92.5 WVKS-FM from Toledo will broadcast live from the arena and will provide the music, she said.

St. Charles Hospital also will be at Anderson giving free health checks, including bodyfat screening, blood pressure tests, and cholesterol tests, Ferguson said.

Campus organizations participating in the Jazz-A-Thon include the Wellness Center and Student Recreation Center. Information about the event was sent to residence halls and fraternity and sorority houses, Ferguson said.

"Alpha Chi Omega has been doing a tremendous amount of work, with making signs," he said.

Proceeds from the $10 registration fee and Jazz-A-Thon T-shirts sold at the event go to the Wood County Special Olympics, said Ferguson.

Participants will also be given a Jazz-A-Thon tote bag, Sheets said.

A fashion show with the latest in exercise fashions will also be shown during the Jazz-A-Thon, Ferguson added.

While Jazzercise raised more than $30,000 for the American Lung Association in 1987, Sheets said this is the first fundraiser the group has done for Special Olympics.

"With the weather being good and the event being local, we hope for a strong response from the University," Ferguson said.

Sheets said there was a 66 percent increase of Special Olympic participants in the last year, making a need for fund raisers to raise more money for the event.

Officer injured in disturbance at Food Town

A Bowling Green police officer was hurt while arresting a man at Food Town, 840 S. Main St., Wednesday evening.

Police said the individual was drunk and threw a mayonnaise jar at the arresting officer's head as he was arrested.

Officer Al Alvord was treated at Wood County Hospital after he arrested Mike McDonald (last known address, Daytona Beach, Fla.) for criminal mischief, resisting arrest, disorderly conduct while intoxicated with persistence, assault and felony theft.

City police received two complaints pertaining to McDonald, including one from a Food Town employee who said he was yelling obscenities at customers as they entered the store.

The employee also said McDonald had tried to open a quart of orange juice and began eating a bag of chips. When another employee asked McDonald if he was planning to pay for the merchandise, he began yelling obscenities at the employee, he reported.

McDonald attempted to throw a mayonnaise jar at Alvord's head but instead it hit the floor and shattered, police said.

When Alvord and the other officer handcuffed McDonald, he began yelling "rape" several times, according to the police report.

McDonald was later transported to Wood County Justice Center.

Alvord twisted his lower back and was hit in the mouth during the struggle to handcuff McDonald. Also, Alvord's shirt was torn and his glasses were broken during the struggle.

Ruchty ends Ice Arena career

Seniors attempt to go out on winning note against Buckeyes

by Steve Easton
assistant sports editor

When push comes to shove, BG assistant captain Matt Ruchty isn't one to turn the other shoulder.

This might be a possible explanation for his 54 penalties and 125 minutes in 34 games this year.

Ruchty is a physical, grinding, hard-working left wing who delivers thundering checks to any opponent in sight.

But tonight's game against Ohio State (8-18-4) at 7:30 marks the end of Ruchty's bone-crushing hits inside the Ice Arena. He, along with seniors Christian Albitz, John Burke, Pierrick Maia, and captain Braden Shavchook, will skate in their final home game.

Ruchty's presence (6-foot-2, 215 pounds) will not be missed by BG's Central Collegiate Hockey Association opponents — especially those run over by his Truck-like checks.

Although Ruchty's penalties number two more than all of last year, he believes his penchant for taking penalties is decreasing. CCHA referees might disagree.

"I think my temper and frustration have improved, but it doesn't show up on the stat sheet," the Kitchener, Ontario native said. "I've built a reputation and you can't change that overnight."

Once Ruchty leaves the collegiate ranks, his style may be more suited for professional hockey. A fourth-round selection of the National Hockey League's New Jersey Devils in 1988, Ruchty's power game fits in far more nicely with the pros than in the NCAA.

"Too many penalties are called in college hockey," he said. "Too much of the game is focused on penalty killing and power plays, and a lot of good players are spending too much time on the bench."

"I don't think that's the way the game should be played. And I can't change my style of play if I want to be successful. I think one of my big worries about coming back this year was if college hockey would deter my improvement."

The Key/Eric Mull

Who Me?

Senior Matt Ruchty voices displeasure about CCHA official's ruling.

After rejecting the Devils' offer after his junior campaign, Ruchty will have a decision to make when the Falcons' season ends — forego the remainder of the semester to sign with New Jersey or finish it while working toward his education degree.

"I'd consider leaving after the season but the offer has to be right," he said. "Hockey is obviously what I want to do right now."

After experiencing a stellar junior season (28 goals-21 assists-49 points), Ruchty's scoring this year (11-18-29) has decreased but his effort hasn't made this season any less acceptable.

"In ways it has been disappointing because a lot of people just look at stats," he said. "No question I haven't had as much luck putting the puck in the net this year as last year.

"I don't really think I've had a bad year. I've been doing a lot of little things right which some people don't notice."

BG head coach Jerry York said Ruchty can be one of the top players in the CCHA when he's playing his game.

"When Matt's skating, hitting, and playing a big man's game he is one of the most valuable players in the league," he said. "He's come a long way since he came here as a 17-year old. He's matured as a person and he is now able to better handle his emotions within the context of the game."

But when the Canadian national anthem is played before tonight's game, many memories will be flashing through Ruchty's mind.

"A good thing is coming to an end, but it's sad," he said. "Playing in this building for four years has been great for me. I don't think you can play in front of a better crowd."

But when the fans of BG hockey hear Ruchty's name in the future, he hopes it will be remembered for the good things and his intense winning desire — not the penalties.

"People enjoy seeing a lot of good hits and action which I give them, and I put the puck in the net every once in a while," Ruchty said. "Hopefully, I've left a positive mark on Bowling Green hockey."

"I hate losing more than anything. I don't think there's anyone that hates losing more than I do."

Women face Kent's offensive entourage

KSU offense ranked second in the nation

by Brian Dugger
sports writer

The women's basketball team is preparing for an offensive assault. The offense of the Kent State basketball team, that is.

An offense that averages 95 points per game (second in the nation) and has topped the century mark nine times this season, including a season-high 132 points against Stetson.

Earlier in the year, they fell two points short of 100 against the Falcons as BG prevailed 106-98.

Saturday afternoon, the two teams will face off again at Anderson Arena starting at 12:45.

The game has taken on added importance because of Wednesday's action. The Falcons lost a 101-79 decision to Toledo and the Flashes knocked off Central Michigan 94-75.

The Falcon loss dropped the Falcons into a third place tie with KSU. Both teams are 8-5 in the Mid-American Conference.

In the first meeting, the Falcons shot a season-high 59 percent from the field and fell three points short of breaking the school record for points in a game.

On the other side, KSU's freshman guard Michelle Burden broke her school record for assists in a game when she dished out 17 against BG. She later eclipsed that record and set an NCAA record with 23 assists against Ball State.

The Flashes also boast the top two scorers in the MAC.

Ann Forbes and Tracey Lynn are scoring 20 and 17.7 points per game, respectively. Against BG, the two combined for 53 points.

"They're a balanced team," BG head coach Fran Voll said. "Tracey [Lynn] has been coming on strong. Obviously, they have a lot of firepower."

KSU utilizes this firepower with a style head coach Bob Lindsay said draws from the systems of Loyola-Marymount and Kentucky.

The Flashes recently broke the NCAA record for three-point attempts in a season.

Going into Wednesday's game against CMU, they had attempted 545 three-pointers on the year — almost 24 attempts per game.

Basically, they shoot a lot, score often and win a majority of their games.

Track competes in MAC invite

Gaerke, Czekaj vie for NCAA Indoor Championship spots

by Patrick Murphy
sports writer

Rebound. This could be a theme for basketball teams, but it's what the track team is looking to do this weekend.

The team travels to the MAC Invitational in Ypsilanti, Mich. for a meet tonight. Both of the teams are looking to do better than they did last weekend at the Ohio Intercollegiate.

"We were up for last weekend and didn't focus on that meet. The conference meet is more important than the Ohio Championships," women's head coach Steve Price said.

Senior Tracy Gaerke Sink will try to qualify for the NCAA Indoor Championships for the second straight weekend, but this time she will try the mile.

Sophomore Vicki Czekaj will also be competing for an NCAA spot, in the high jump. She needs to jump 6 feet to automatically qualify. Her best effort this season has been 5-feet-8-inches.

Price thinks the team will do better this week.

"I want us to finish in the top two and I think that we can do it," he said.

The men are also looking to get improved performances from the Ohio meet.

"We're going after all that we can get. This is the climax to the indoor season," men's head coach Sid Sink said.

One area the team looks to do well in is the 35 pound weight competition. Sink expects success from the throwers who didn't compete in the Ohio Invitational because Ohio State does not throw the weight.

Overall, Sink thinks the team should bounce back.

"Eastern Michigan is a good place to compete," he said. "The competition is as good as or better than last week. If we compete strongly, we can be in the top two."

Falcon Notes:

Both teams still have some people who are not up to par but they should compete, except for senior Jon Monheim (long distance runner) out indefinitely with a groin injury.

For the women junior Amy Litz (triple jump) who has a shin injury, senior Janice Hare (55, 200, 400 and mile relay) who has a back problem, and junior Ginger Lake (pentathlon, 55 hurdles, and 200 hurdles) still has a touch of the flu.

The men's injuries include freshman Aaron Straw (55) is week to week with a strained hamstring, junior Bill Overla will compete with a sore ankle and senior Steve Bellow (long jump and triple jump) who has a foot injury isn't likely to compete.

BG tennis tries to earn first victory

Women's tennis team travels to Akron

by Sebastian Francis Caruthers
sports writer

Enough is enough.

The men's tennis team is tired of being kicked around by Big Ten competition.

The Falcons will try to prove this when they travel to Wisconsin on Saturday.

The Badgers were picked to win the Big Ten in a pre-season poll and are ranked second in the Mid-West.

"This weekend with the Badgers is a big opportunity for our program to prove that we can compete with any of the top teams in the Midwest and in the nation," BG coach Gene Orlando said.

Wisconsin plays a Top 20 schedule and is 4-2. The Badgers losses were to fourth ranked Tennessee, 5-4 and ninth ranked Kansas, 5-4. Orlando said Wisconsin has a "big-time" program.

The men also have a dual match at Marquette, Sunday and should be more evenly matched, but Orlando doesn't want his team to take the match lightly.

"Marquette is a very dangerous team," Orlando said. "They have attracted some quality players from all over the country with their incredible on-campus Indoor Tennis Center."

The women's tennis team will play at Akron, Saturday at noon.

The women's gymnastics team travels to Mount Pleasant, Mich. Saturday for a meet with Central Michigan at 2 p.m.

Men looking to halt skid | Baseball batteries return to spring training homes

Basketball team tries to sweep season series against Kent

by Todd Herzog
sports writer

Don't count the Falcons out yet.

Even though they've been eliminated from the regular season Mid-American Conference title race, it's the MAC tourney winner that gets an automatic NCAA birth.

"We know that we're out of it for the regular season race but there is a short season left, including these last three games and the tournament," said BG coach Jim Larranaga. "Of course we're disappointed but we're not going to fold our tents."

With Kent State coming to town on Saturday, BG will look to gain some momentum heading into the post-season MAC tourney in Detroit, March 7-10.

"Kent is a very strong team, they beat Eastern Michigan in Ypsilanti," Larranaga said. Kent is the only team to win at Eastern this year.

The Golden Flashes aren't a team that should be taken lightly, especially the way BG has played of late. KSU is lead by 6-5 junior Tony Banks who is averaging 16 points per game and pulling down 7.3 rebounds per contest. Banks is complimented by 6-3 junior Mike Klinzing and his 13.6 ppg and 3.2 assists per game.

Kent, fresh off a hard fought victory over Central Michigan on Wednesday, enters the contest at 4-9. Though their record is 4-9, Kent won't simply be going through the motions, they're also looking for momentum heading into the tourney.

In three-game losing streaks, problems can be numerous, but the next few games may come down to how bad the Falcon players want to win.

"(The players) are the ones who put in the time and the energy and they are the ones that have to live with the results, which is far more long lasting than any fan," Larranaga said, referring to recent student criticisms.

by Ben Walker
AP baseball writer

Baseball returned Thursday as Eric Davis and plenty of pitchers and catchers started spring training on schedule. Even Steve Howe was there, but Bo was a no go and Jim Palmer was a maybe so.

Skies were sunny in Florida and Arizona as 15 teams opened for business.

"There seems to be a lot of anxious anxiety to get going," New York Mets manager Bud Harrelson said in Port St. Lucie, Fla., where about 100 fans watched David Cone, Mackey Sasser and some others run through the outfield.

Officially, only pitchers and catchers were supposed to show up Thursday. But Davis, Barry Larkin, Rob Dibble, and Tom Browning were among more than a dozen regulars from the World Series champion Cincinnati Reds on the fields in Plant City, Fla.

Davis, recovering from a kidney injury in Game 4 of the sweep cause of drug and alcohol use. He has not pitched in the majors since 1987 with the Texas Rangers, but after a two-day tryout, got invited to the Yankees' camp.

"I feel there have been a lot worse things in baseball than bringing Steve Howe back,"

"I've never been more excited about a camp,"

--Frank Robinson, Orioles manager over the Oakland A's and off-season knee surgery, will take it slow for awhile. So will Bo Jackson.

The Kansas City Royals put their star outfielder on crutches for four weeks after discovering that a hip injury he sustained in the NFL playoff game is more serious than originally thought.

"It's not just the usual pulled muscle," Royals trainer Nick Swartz said Thursday. "He's not in the mild-injury category."

Jackson is to report to the Royals' camp in Haines City, Fla., along with the position players. He will undergo therapy and do exercises, but is likely to miss the first part of the exhibition schedule.

"He was pretty upbeat, not real down," Royals manager John Wathan said after a telephone conversation with Jackson. "I guess disappointed is the right word."

At the New York Yankees' camp in Fort Lauderdale, Fla., pitcher Pascual Perez was absent. The reason: visa problems.

But the big news from the Yankees was that Howe, once one of the game's most promising pitchers, was getting a second chance. In his case, it is a seventh chance.

Howe, the National League rookie of the year in 1980, has been suspended six times by Yankees general manager Gene Michael said. "If he was my son or your son, you'd want somebody to bring him back. It's a good business deal and a nice opportunity for this young man."

"Drugs taking away my whole career has been hard to deal with. It probably cost me $8-10 million in salary alone," said Howe, 33 next month. "I feel real thankful I got this opportunity. I've been walking around praying that this wasn't a cruel trick nature played."

Whether Palmer's body will enable him to make a comeback at age 45 is still uncertain. The Baltimore Orioles have invited their former ace to camp and Palmer seemed ready to come.

Palmer, who has been working out in Florida, said Thursday he has "pretty much" decided to accept the Orioles' offer. He hasn't pitched in the big leagues since 1984 and if he successfully returns, Palmer would become the first baseball Hall of Famer to play again.

"It's not an easy decision and I know I'll be a long shot to make the club," he said.

Ben McDonald, the Orioles' newest ace, was among the players in Sarasota, Fla., when Baltimore began spring training. Mike Flanagan, once Palmer's rotation mate, was also there, courtesy of an invitation.

"I've never been more excited about a camp," Orioles manager Frank Robinson said.

The San Diego Padres will be the last team to start spring training, on Monday. All teams will hold their first official workouts by next week and the opening day for the exhibition season is March 7.

'The Rocket' impresses NFL scouts

by Thomas P. Wyman
associated press writer

SOUTH BEND, Ind. — Raghib "Rocket" Ismail showed NFL scouts what they already know.

Ismail strutted his stuff during a one-man show Thursday while scouts from 15 NFL teams applied stopwatches, tape measures, and shrewdness to measure the potential No. 1 draft pick.

"He has excellent speed, athletic ability and all the personality traits that you're looking for in a first pick," said Joe Mendes, the New England Patriots' personnel director.

The Patriots, 1-15 last season, hold the first pick, and Mendes began courting Ismail early in the day, inviting him to a get-acquainted breakfast of Belgian waffles and orange juice.

"As special as his workout was, when you look at the whole day, he was even more special as a person," Mendes said.

"If he's a sign of the Patriots' organization, then hey, I'm all for it," Ismail said of Mendes.

Mendes gave no indication whether the Patriots would draft Ismail or trade away the top pick.

"We're still busy evaluating all the players in the country," Mendes said. Ismail hinted he might not be the player the Patriots need to rebuild their offense. Asked to think like an owner, he wasn't sure whether he would trade for himself.

"If we already had great linemen, and a quarterback and some decent running backs, and just needed somebody to spark things up, yes," he said. "But if we needed everything, then I don't know."

Ismail gave up a final year of eligibility to enter the draft. In three seasons, his 15 touchdowns included five on kickoff returns. He gained 4,187 all-purpose yards.

During a closed workout that lasted about 30 minutes, Ismail ran a 40-yard dash, did a vertical jump and caught passes for about 20 minutes.

He missed two passes from Pittsburgh Steelers receivers coach Dwayne Painter, and a third bounced off his hands, Notre Dame sports information director John Heisler said.

"He did everything well," he said. "He could do," said Leon Burnett, offensive coordinator for the Indianapolis Colts.

Mendes agrees that Ismail's only weak point to his game could be his pass-receiving skills.

"I would say there was concern about his hands," Mendes said. "Let's face it, he hasn't caught as many balls at Notre Dame as he would, say, if he was a featured receiver at Stanford or BYU."

George Stewart, special teams coach for the Steelers and a former Notre Dame assistant, said Ismail "has all the skills necessary to be an outstanding receiver in the National Football League."

Ismail has great "playing strength" despite his 5-foot-10, 175-pound frame, Stewart said.

Also scouting him were the Chicago Bears, Cincinnati Bengals, Kansas City Chiefs, Atlanta Falcons, Detroit Lions, Green Bay Packers, Washington Redskins, Miami Dolphins, Los Angeles Raiders, New York Jets, Cleveland Browns and Dallas Cowboys.

On bulletin boards campus-wide, the Battle of the Persian Gulf War fliers rages on. Fliers have always been an obvious attempt to shape public opinion and the recent events in the Gulf have led to a flurry of xerox art activity.

The pro-war propagandists have borrowed the Camel cigarette slogan and released the semi-clever "I'd fly 20,000 miles to smoke a camel" (with the jet flying over the Arab on the camel - which I'm guessing is supposed to represent the same Iraqi army which has littered a desert border with mines). They've also produced the absolutely tasteless "Iraqi Scud Missile" flier which portrays an Arab about to strike a camel in the testicles with a hammer. Accurate boys, real accurate.

Elbow to the Face

by

On the other side of the Big Valley, the anti-war forces (is that an oxymoron?) have pulled no punches with such doozies as the "Berlin, 1941/Bowling Green, 1991" one visually comparing the Phi Delt to the Nazis. It was probably stretching the point, but on a graphic level, it worked. Their latest creation reads: "The United States of America. We support our troops...to death." and portrays a bleeding American flag above caskets draped in the flag. It's brutal, sorta crude, and very effective.

So far, the anti-war fliers can claim an aesthetic and artistic victory over their competitors. As in all forms of public art, both sides are dealing in gross exaggerations, but the anti-war folks are making their audience react with thought while the pro-war graphics guys are aiming for a redneck belly laugh. But the important thing is that both sides have been galvanized into action — and public action at that — in Northwest Ohio. A little conflict never hurt anybody. Keep an eye on those kiosks.

Both Public Enemy and Sinead O'Connor boycotted the Grammy Awards this week. Public Enemy cited the Grammys' racist policies. I can buy that. Sinead skipped because "the awards are more an indication of financial success than artistic achievement." I can't buy that.

I mean, tell us something we didn't know. Of all the humanitarian liberal reasons (such as mass stupidity — the Grammys named Jethro Tull best heavy metal band a few years ago) Sinead could have hid behind to avoid a night on the town, this one's pretty lame. Her protest isn't going to make M.C. Hammer any poorer or the Replacements any richer. All she did is deny her legions of fans a chance to see her receive some of the recognition she deserves. Kinda selfish if you ask me.

My sister turned 18 almost a month ago. My brother turns 16 in a few days. This age business doesn't really sit that well with me. I guess I'm allowed to get older but they've got to stay young. God, I feel so responsible all of a sudden. I hope it'll pass.

The Cleveland Plain Dealer recently reviewed the Browns' roster, since the team had to protect 37 players from Plan B free agent signings. The article came to the conclusion that the Browns would have a hard time finding 37 players to protect instead of deciding which ones to keep. Nothing like kicking a dawg when he's down.

But just think: Sandy Alomar, Jr.

So ya think Kevin Coughlin can get his three-piece butt out of this whole gay discrimination mess or what? Or is he going down Titanic-style? I can see the headlines now: LAGA THUNDER, COUGHLIN'S GOING UNDER.

Master of disaster, renegade blaster, my mind's movin' faster.

RAW POWER: Tony Joseph cuts to the heart of acoustic country at the Ottawa Tavern.

Back To Basics

Toledo's Ottawa Tavern spotlights acoustic musicians

by Morrella Raleigh
contributing writer

Local music audiences, bored with recent live performances, crowded bar atmospheres, and high cover charges may find comfort in the fact that an old musical style with a new kind of flair — a clear alternative — is being offered free at a Toledo tavern.

The Ottawa Tavern's alternative acoustic night every Monday features local, solo guitarists performing mostly original tunes, according to organizer and musician Stephen Budd.

Budd said the Monday night music "covers a wide range from alternative to folk to blues."

"It's music which is very listenable and lyrics which have something relevant to say," he added.

The tavern, located on the corner of Bancroft and Upton in Toledo, is about a mile downtown from the University of Toledo. Budd describes it as "the American equivalent of a pub."

"It's a coffee house atmosphere — very intimate and relaxing," he said. "It's really dark and cozy with candles." To add to the atmosphere, a single blue light shines on the stage.

Mondays are open acoustic night. Musicians interested in playing should arrive for sign-ups by 8:30 p.m. Four to seven musicians perform about 30 minute sets every Monday. The show lasts from about 9 p.m. to 1 a.m.

Budd said the night is a wonderful opportunity for him as a musician. "I wanted to concentrate on songwriting. Good songs are written simply and then produced. What's most important is the feelings and the soul," he said.

"Playing acoustically shows the strength of your songs," he added.

In addition to Budd, regular performers include John Van Dyne of local pop combo Trip 20 and 12-string guitarist Tony Joseph.

Ottawa owner Joe Loeffler thought of the idea for acoustic musicians to play in the club after seeing Budd perform. "Mondays are slow and I was glad to open an avenue for things that aren't being done," Loeffler said.

The acoustic nights began in mid-November as a four week stint. The fact that they've lasted indicates that music fans were ready for a change.

Loeffler said the crowd is a little different than most barroom audiences. "They're a more attentive crowd, more appreciative of the original stuff that's being played," he said.

Patrick Lewandowski, a rhythm and blues performer, has frequently played on acoustic night.

"It's giving [local musicians] a chance to get out and play in front of people who appreciate it," Lewandowski said.

"[Alternative acoustic night] helps to show that along with Frankie's and Uptown, there's another place that is helping to build an alternative scene in the Toledo area," Budd said. "(One) which is necessary and hopefully forthcoming."

Marley fest set to groove University

by Marjie Milnor
contributing writer

February 6th marked the birthday of the King of Reggae, Bob Marley, and the reggae band Groovemaster will be celebrating the event in its own way. This Saturday night, February 23rd, from 9:00 p.m. to 1:00 a.m., the University will host the Seventh Annual Reggae Tribute to Bob Marley.

Commemorative Marley concerts like this have been held at the University since 1983, two years after Marley's death. The tribute, planned as part of African-American History Month, will be held in Northeast Commons. This year's event is being sponsored by The Caribbean Association, Alpha Phi Alpha, The Progressive Student Association, Ethnic Cultural Arts Program, Graduate Student Senate, Minority Student Activities, and Women for Women.

Marley was best known for his "roots reggae," which emphasized life and human rights. In songs such as "Get Up, Stand Up" and "Buffalo Soldier," but was criticized when his writings began to encompass such things as love songs. Now ten years after Marley's death, reggae is beginning to gain popularity here in the United States.

"Most people get introduced to reggae through Bob Marley... for a lot of people he symbolizes reggae," Groovemaster guitarist Mike Nemeth said. "He could take a common experience and make it crystal clear — it's poetry."

Though reggae appeals to people of all ages, musicians do not gravitate towards reggae mainly because it doesn't get as much

ROCK GOSSIP FROM THE BLACK SWAMP

EENY-MEENY-MINY-MOE

Local consensus would lead the average Joe Scenester to believe that Random Soul has been one of BG's finer rock crews lately. Word has it they've got the beat that's oh-so-sweet. They're supposed to be pretty loud, too. I wouldn't be sayin' anything since I haven't seen 'em yet but a lot of little birds have been whisperin' in my ear lately so I figured you ought to know.

LET IT OUT

Joe-N-Jamie, former members of Big Hunk O'Cheese (in their pre-funk era) have just released a self-titled six-song cassette. Check it out at Mad Hatter Music Company, 143 E. Wooster in downtown BG.

VAMBO RAMBLE

Those rumors of a Vambo Marble Eye single are true, teen-beats! The VME boys should be bustin' out their debut 45 - "Half Step To Your One" b/w "Seventh Street" - in a few weeks. If it's as powerful as their live shows, it'll be a fist-sized snort for sure. Stop what you're doin' cuz they're about to ruin the image and the sound that you're used to.

FATHER FORGIVE HIM

Local acoustic curmudgeon Chuck Travis recently met Sam Kinison during a traumatic West Coast jaunt. Travis reportedly walked up to Kinison and said "You're God."

Boy I wish I was lying.

Glanz plans A&S future

by David Smith
contributing writer

A University administrator returned from a national leadership program with a vision of the future and a renewed sense of pride in her university.

Dr. Dawn Glanz, assistant dean for the college of Arts and Sciences, participated at this workshop entitled "Leadership For a New Century," held Jan. 25-Feb. 1 in Phoenix, Arizona.

The program was held for women in administrative positions at four-year colleges or universities. Opportunities for participants included a chance to scrutinize the future of higher education in the decade ahead as well as improve their skills in personnel management, planning and budgeting.

A variety of programs and seminars were held keeping Dr. Glanz busy from 9 to 5 practically every day of the week. The primary focus was to encourage women in administration to improve their careers.

Glanz viewed the whole experience as impressive and encouraging.

"It was wonderful to be with a group of women in very responsible positions," Glanz said. "We came to realize that we had more abilities than we thought."

Since the women came from all over the country, Glanz had the opportunity to take notes and make comparisons with other universities. The results left her feeling optimistic.

"We have a potential here that I didn't recognize...I feel very positive."

But the workshop was just the beginning. The second phase of her program is instituting, under the direction of Andrew Kerek, college of Arts and Sciences dean, a planning process within the college that will last from one year to a year and a half.

The purpose of the project, according to Glanz is "to develop a vision for the college...to have a

"WHAT CAN YOU LOSE?"

Lou Gossett Jr. follows simple creed to join Hollywood elite

by Brian Lumley film critic

"A man of immediate composure—stern, well-framed, and very gentlemanly. Intelligent and able to express himself well. Excellent sense of humor and generally, 'Off-the-cuff.' Are these the ingredients of an Academy Award-winning actor?"

These were my first notes as I sat in front of Louis Gossett, Jr., actor and humanitarian. Gossett was speaking at Lorain County Community College as part of the college's award-winning Prominent American Lectures Series. He spoke on February 14 before a full house at LCCC's Stocker Center.

Gossett's 1982 Oscar win placed him in a category with a small percentage of other actors who have been deemed "Hollywood's Best." He stood tall before me, somewhat imposing, but revealed a sense of warmth not found in his usual tough guy roles.

Gossett was born in Brooklyn to a relatively poor family. Calling Brooklyn the "great melting pot," he commented on the great ethnic variety and lack of strife now inherent in New York. Raised amongst Brooklyn's elite—professors and teachers that fled to New York in fear of the impending communist witch hunts—his education was well-rounded and he credited it with making him the person that he is today.

Spurned on by the inspiration of a teacher, Gossett became class president and learned that his "love of life was stimulated" at a young age. By age seventeen, he knew "that the color of my skin was not going to stop me."

Because of an injury, Gossett had to leave his destined life of athletics behind. Down but not out, he tried out for the school play. Asked by a mentor and respected teacher to try for the part, Gossett said he learned an invaluable life lesson—"What can you lose?" Since then, that phrase has been his motto of sorts, eventually leading to his Best Supporting Actor Oscar for

Insider/April Clark

1982's "An Officer and A Gentleman."

After graduating from high school, Gossett landed a role in a Broadway play, prophetically titled "Take a Giant Step;" he realized his future lay in theater. Gossett tried to lose his accent, part "Russian-Jewish, Italian, Irish, all rounded out with a touch of soul." He got a "tongue-transplant and a passport," left Brooklyn, and has been working steadily ever since.

In 1976, he took a small role in Alex Haley's television miniseries, "Roots" playing Fiddler, and turned it into an Emmy-winning performance. He credited his grandmother with that "victory," claiming her spirit was what made Fiddler into such an inspiring and rewarding experience.

From that point on came a deluge of roles, most notably the tough-as-nails Drill Instructor Foley in "An Officer and A Gentleman." Realizing that only white actors were being considered for the part, Gossett asked for an audition. He walked into the casting office ready to complain about the problem; Gossett was met with open arms and told he had the role sans an audition.

Two months of "basic training" at San Diego's Drill Instructor Training School ensued. "I was a DI by the end of two months," Gossett commented.

Both Gossett and director Taylor Hackford were somewhat annoyed with fellow actor Richard Gere, who was "making this little film" that meant nothing to Gere, but was "vitally important to both Taylor and (Gossett)." By applying his newly-aquired drill instructor techniques, Gossett was able to transform Gere into a respectable "soldier" by the end of shooting.

Gossett also starred in the science fiction thriller "Enemy Mine," a lesser-known but beautifully rendered European production. The role led Gossett into a whole new line of thought. Citing his character, a six-foot tall reptilian alien, Gossett said that he learned a new respect for religion that reinforced his own personal beliefs. He played the character from a "spiritual approach," peeling back the philosophy of the being and understanding the alien's approach to life.

It was much harder to play this character, due to its "unique philosophy," according to Gossett. More importantly, the fifty pounds of latex rubber that took ten hours to apply was painstaking, eventually giving Gossett a terrible skin rash.

"Ten hours of makeup is no fun, especially when they design the suit without a means of going to the bathroom!" Gossett said.

Surprisingly, Gossett spoke more on Hollywood and its politics more than he did on his own film roles. I asked him why only four blacks have won Academy Awards. He quickly jumped at an answer. "The lack of black recognition is a major problem in Hollywood, and one that needs to be dealt with," he said.

He said that a growing consciousness is being raised and that a handful of black actors will soon need to be reckoned with.

Gossett went out on a limb in predicting that Whoopi Goldberg will win a Best Supporting Actress statuette (for "Ghost") mainly "because of her body of work and (because) she was overlooked for 'The Color Purple.'"

Gossett also mentioned Kevin Costner's epic "Dances with Wolves," which should win Best Picture because it is "exceptional." Gossett said it deserves the award because Costner followed Gossett's motto—"What can you lose?"—and defied Hollywood.

"You don't make a western, make it three hours long, produce, direct and star in it, and make it good," Gossett said.

Sidney Poitier is "the greatest actor alive" and a direct inspiration on Gossett's life.

"People see me as a star and role model, but I look at others in the same light," he said.

At a recent party he ran into Los Angeles Lakers star Magic Johnson, who immediately "went wide-eyed and asked for my au-

SKIN SKETCH: Nude models help University art students learn how to draw the human body.

Artists reveal naked truth

by Emily Vosburg

Six University students are literally baring it all for the sake of education this semester.

These people aren't deviants. They're models for the life drawing classes here, and to the students drawing them, they aren't seen as naked people. Rather, they are like any other still life.

"It's important just to get the idea of how the shape of the human body is," Paul Perry, senior liberal studies major, said. "It's part of how people learn to draw."

Some people express doubts or seem squeamish about students drawing nude models. "It's like anything you're conditioned to believe fits into only one category," Dreamwalker, junior fine arts major, said. "The comment reveals the person who made it more than saying anything about life drawing classes."

Professor Adrian Tio has been teaching life drawing classes at the University since 1979. "The model is another object like a building or a tree," he said. "They are nude so that the clothing doesn't get in the way — it tends to hide or disguise the body."

Tio added that women are less reluctant to model than men are, perhaps because of the classical portrayal of women in art. "For the guys it's a job, for the women, who understand their role as a model, art is a very romantic endeavor and they take it that way."

The models don't always have a background in art. "Sometimes it's people who are interested in art and they're confident enough with their physique that they want to be part of the process," Tio said.

Julie (last name withheld) has modeled for two years now. "I lived with an art major and consider myself an artistic person," she said. "I was also curious as to what it would be like to model."

Tio said he attempts to find models of different races and body types and from both sexes.

"I think to be a model, its important to be proud of your body whether you're skinny or voluptuous. Your self-esteem has to be

Superdancers shake their booty for MDA

by David Smith

It can kill you or someone you love. It can strike a child or a middle-aged man. It can make your life unbearable. And no matter what form of muscular dystrophy strikes you there is little you can do about it. But there is hope.

"This is a relatively rare condition," according to Dr. Joshua Kaplan, Director of the Student Health Service, "but extremely disabling and fatal...certainly a condition in which the sufferers deserve our sympathy and support."

For the sixteenth year, the Residential Student Association has given that sympathy and support by sponsoring an annual dance-a-thon. This 24-hour dance will begin next Friday, March 1, at 6 p.m. in the Northeast Commons.

All proceeds from the dance are going to MDA to help in world-wide research in the fight against Muscular Dystrophy.

MSA is not alone in holding this event — the organization also sends out letters to other campus organizations asking them to co-sponsor the dance-a-thon. Some of the groups participating include the SCEC (Student Council for Exceptional Children), Kreischer Quadrangle government, SOLD, World Student Association, Omega Phi Alpha, Macdonald North hall council, Reach Out and WFAL. The greater Toledo area chapter of the Muscular Dystrophy Association (MDA) also assists in directing and donating to the fund raiser.

The primary focus of the fundraiser will be on the superdancers, who participate by first picking up a superdancer packet for $2 at 425 Student Services or in the Union foyer Monday and Wednesday. Next, they must find people who will sponsor them for every hour they are active at the fundraiser dancing or playing games. The dancers must keep moving every 50 minutes to the hour, except during 6-7 a.m. Saturday, when they will be given a half hour to shower.

The superdancer who raises the most money receives a VCR from the MDA. There will also be several other prizes and gift certificates available donated from local businesses.

Activities galore are planned every hour for all in attendance. A giant twister game and a limbo contest will keep the superdancers moving and Freddy and Frieda Falcon will be there to cheer the superdancers on along with the University cheerleaders. An open dance will also be held from 7 p.m.-2 a.m. Friday.

Desiree Vecchia, entertainment director for the project, helped arrange for several bands to play at the dance and for disc jockeys from WFAL to keep the music rolling. The theme is "Dance Today for Tomorrow" and the music will range from 40s big band to 90s rock-n-roll.

"I had a really fun time doing it last year and it felt good knowing I was helping others," said Vecchia, "I didn't mind volunteering again this year."

tograph." Gossett, in turn, did the same thing.

Looking for role models is tough, and Gossett said he feels lucky to have "a positive impact on the black community."

Leaving filmdom behind, Gossett waxed about a lesser-known facet of his personality.

His three main concerns in life are "children of the world, the homeless, and the preservation of the planet." He also talked about the need for people to get involved in local projects that help the needy and to show greater vocal concern for the planet, which needs "desperate help." Gossett is currently involved in a sort of "Earthathon," airing on TNT in September, where people will be able to phone in and "pledge their support for their planet."

Gossett refused to divulge his feelings on the war in the Persian Gulf until the situation was rectified.

"War is getting sophisticated," Gossett said. "We need another way to deal with our differences."

Gossett left with a simple bit of advice, "DO IT!!...After all, what can you lose?"

well intact," Julie said.

Efforts are made to make the models as comfortable as possible. They pose on drapes and pillows and a space heater is set up near the stand during the winter. Models hold the same pose for varying lengths of time — anywhere from three minutes to three class sessions, so comfort is essential.

The models have a changing room and are given robes to wear during the times they are not posing. The model stand is elevated over the class, and the model is told that this is her private space and instructed to focus on her pose.

"The idea that it's a nude figure drops out of your head after a while. You have to concentrate on the drawing, so the challenge is focused in a different way," he added.

The models are supposed to concentrate on their roles as well and not look around or fall asleep. However, this caused a problem for a male model a few years ago.

"The model fell asleep and he had one of those 'nice dreams'...the students didn't know what to draw," Tio said. "I told them to draw it either way," he added with a wry grin.

Julie said she doesn't feel there is anything sexual about being a model.

"People often ask if its embarrassing. But it's not a matter of being nude. It's the satisfaction of being drawn and becoming immortalized in a sense. That's an image that may last longer than me."

Glanz sees several goals that she would like to be accomplished through this project. One of Glanz' goals is to see "the mission of this college...be more articulated." Furthermore, this will hopefully create a situation in which the allocation of resources more efficient, allowing more time for progress through times

Brenda's running along the same path as Soul II Soul, but she has her own sound. This album was danceable with a moderate African sound to it. Being from South Africa, and a distant relative of Nelson Mandela, her lyrics attempt to comment on South African culture. She's been in the music scene since the age of four and she has the potential to make it big. Brenda first hit the air in March of 1986 with a version of "Weekend Special" on Capitol Records, but she did not seem to stick to the charts for very long. Although many of the songs have a similar sound, it's an enjoyable

It's a simple fact of poprock91 that this album of good-natured if somewhat unremarkable guitar pop by the singer/songwriter duo of Phil Solem and Danny Wilde will probably fall by the wayside because of a gaping lack of a gimmick. "Just The Way It Is, Baby" pleasantly recalls "Baby Come Back" and "Baker Street" and any number of bombastic ballads of the late 70s and "Show Me Your Love" sounds like Nelson after a prolonged and intense emotional trauma. But the rest of this self-titled debut is easily overlooked in a world where a few bad asses with drum machines can turn Suzanne Vega into a disco star.
